

TIME TO VOTE

The recession officially ended in June of 2009. Since then, the economy has been either slogging its way along or ripping to record levels. Here's a look at the winners. Stocks for the past 5 1/2 years have been on a tear; housing prices have bounced nicely off their lows; unemployment has been cut by 40%; consumer confidence is pushing 7 year highs; interest rates remain low; inflation is in check and gasoline prices are falling. What more could you ask for?

Unfortunately, things are still pretty darn tough. In fact, middle class families have seen their incomes fall by nearly 8 percent in the past 7 years. Education, food, medical care, and housing costs are escalating. Is there a solution you ask? You bet there is! It requires one primary change, "common sense pro-growth fiscal policy." Isn't it time for our voices to be heard?
