

#DJIA +4.31%

The past three trading sessions the Dow Jones Industrial Average has risen 4.31%, sparked by the "considerable time" stance by the Fed and seasonal strength that is welcomed this time of year. Was last week a flash in the pan or is there more to come? According to the Wall Street Journal, the last 7 trading sessions have posted an average of +1.4% return for investors since 1928. To be clear, past performance is not an indicator of future results and who's to know whether stocks will rise or fall? The holiday season is full of fun and festivity. It is also a time to measure investment results for the year and if we are lucky, perhaps Santa will add an extra bit of 🎵 jingle🎵 in our stockings to close out the year.

William "Chip" Corley, MBA, RFC